

Letter #5

Dear '07's:-

All day we have celebrated in true '07 style the fourth anniversary of our graduation day. The fateful jug has been duly unearthed together with other treasures whose existence was undreamed of by the great majority of the class. With proper ceremony those letters of years ago have been read and commented upon. We have partaken of refreshments for the fifth time today and still feel rather hungry, for as in days of yore we would rather eat than sleep. Now in the dark hour just before dawn we sit in solemn state to write these letters to the best people we know, the '07's. Jay Woodrow's years at Oxford have not improved his disposition for he now says unkind things to his friends. We thought last year Jeannette would bring her husband to this meeting, but although she has disappointed us this time we are confident that she will not do so at our next reunion.

May many of the class be present when little jug No. 2 is opened in 1916.
